The RAINY DAY Collection

What's the last thing you need on a rainy day, more rain? Here are some paintings to help dry you off. Let's start with James Clarke Hook who travelled all around the English coastline from the 1850s onwards. Ah, what a beautiful day.

Sandpipers, Alnmouth was painted by Winifred Nicholson during a holiday to the Northumberland coast. Nicholson's paintings have an air of freshness, breathe in and you can smell the sea air.

The Cock Tavern by Richard Wilson is a great example of where all Englishmen dream of being on a sunny day. Yes, that's right, by a pub in the heart of the English countryside, enjoying the view and a pint, or two.

All these sun filled landscapes must have put you in the mood to relax in the comfy chair on Ivon Hitchens' Balcony at Cambridge. There's no better way to relax.

Here's something colourful to brighten up a dreary day. The artist Patrick Heron said "I referred to the series as garden paintings, since they certainly related in my mind to the extraordinary effervescence of flowering azaleas and camellias erupting all over the garden". Beautiful.

Hopefully you have dried off and warmed up a bit, imagine it's a glorious sunny day outside – we can dream can't we?
