All information is correct at the time of publication.

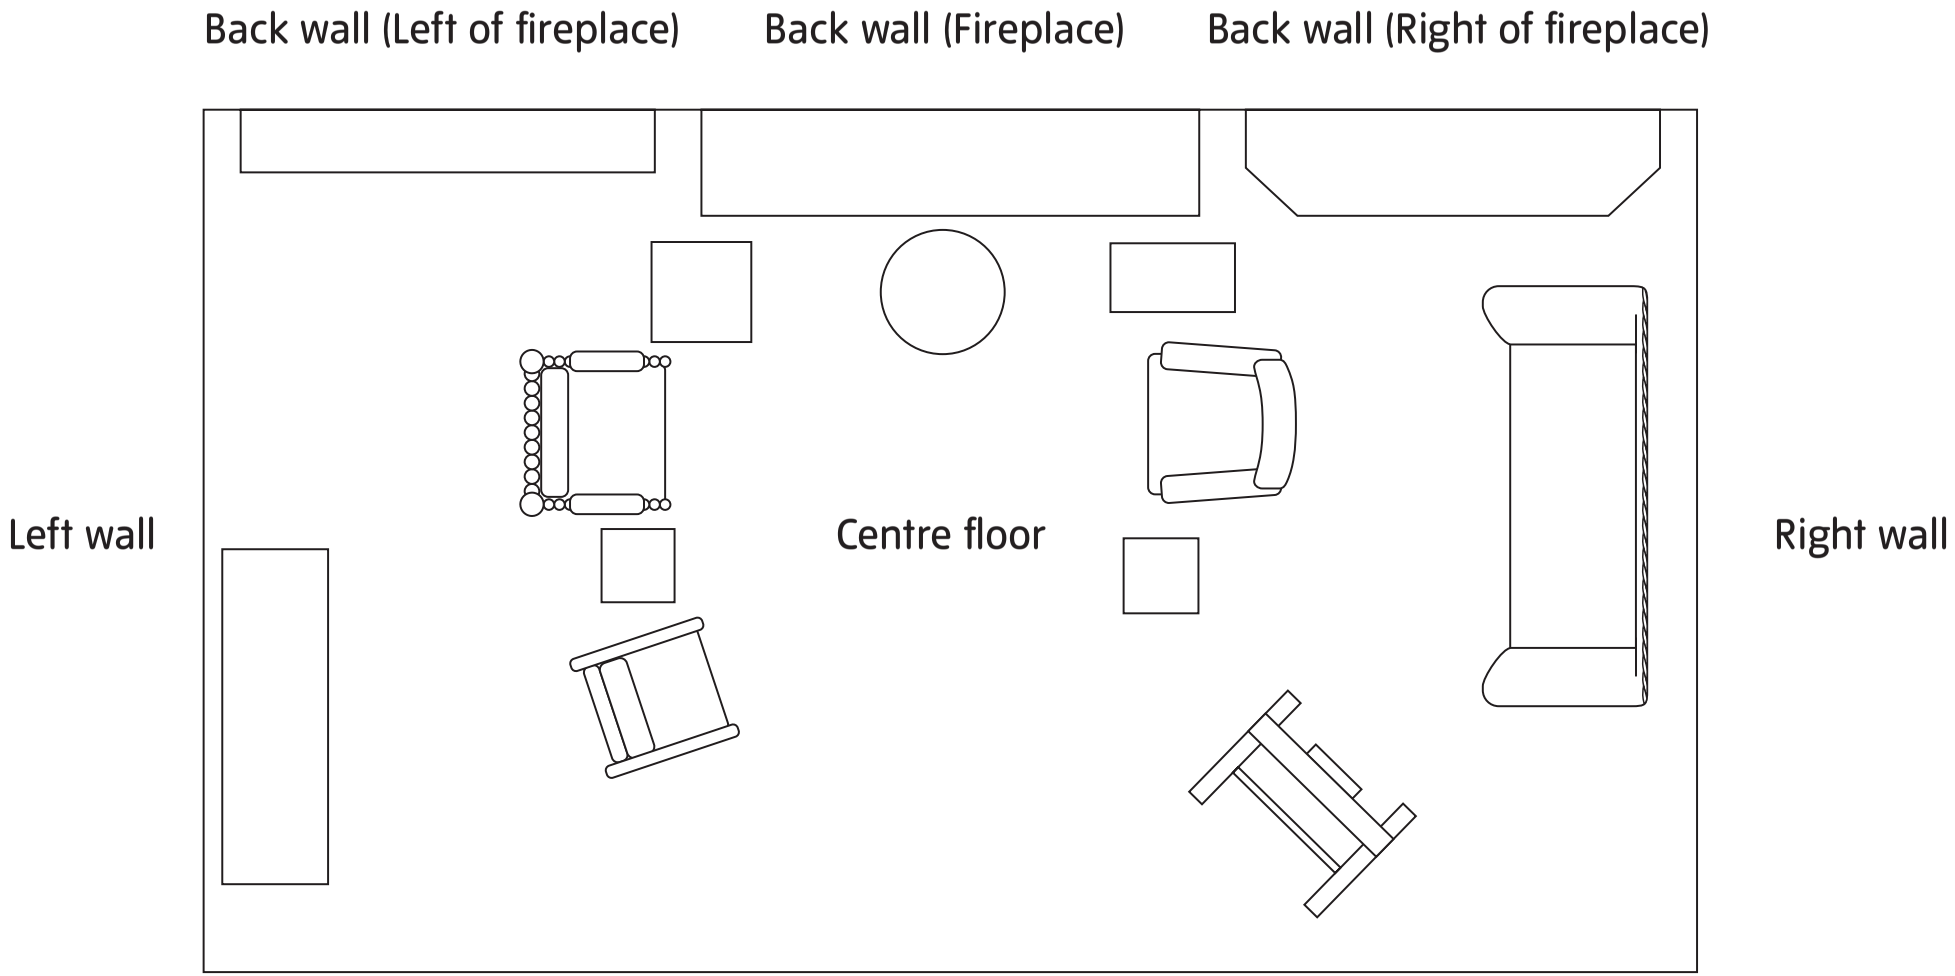

Vanessa and Duncan built a studio on the ground floor of Charleston in 1925. Designed by Roger Fry, it became the creative heart of the house, where they painted, welcomed friends and exchanged ideas.

More than a century later, the building that houses the studio is undergoing essential conservation to safeguard it for future generations. While this work takes place at Charleston, Tate has the rare opportunity to restage the studio as part of this exhibition.

The painted walls and mantelpiece have been faithfully recreated, along with Vanessa's murals, while every object on display has been relocated from Charleston.

This guide provides a complete list of the furniture, textiles, ceramics, paintings, books, decorative objects and personal belongings brought from the studio for this display.

If not otherwise stated, all works have been loaned from The Charleston Trust.
